

Predator

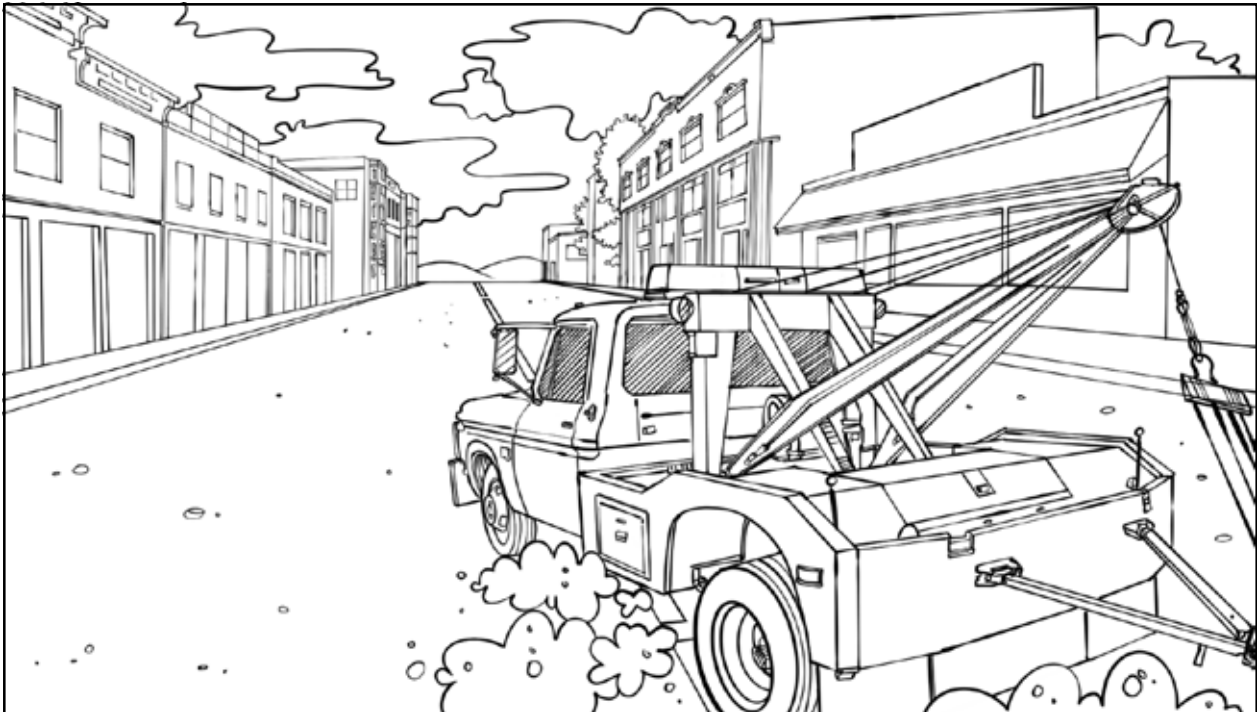

This tv spot uses classic western movie cues to tell our story). We open on a shot of a small, yet lively town. .

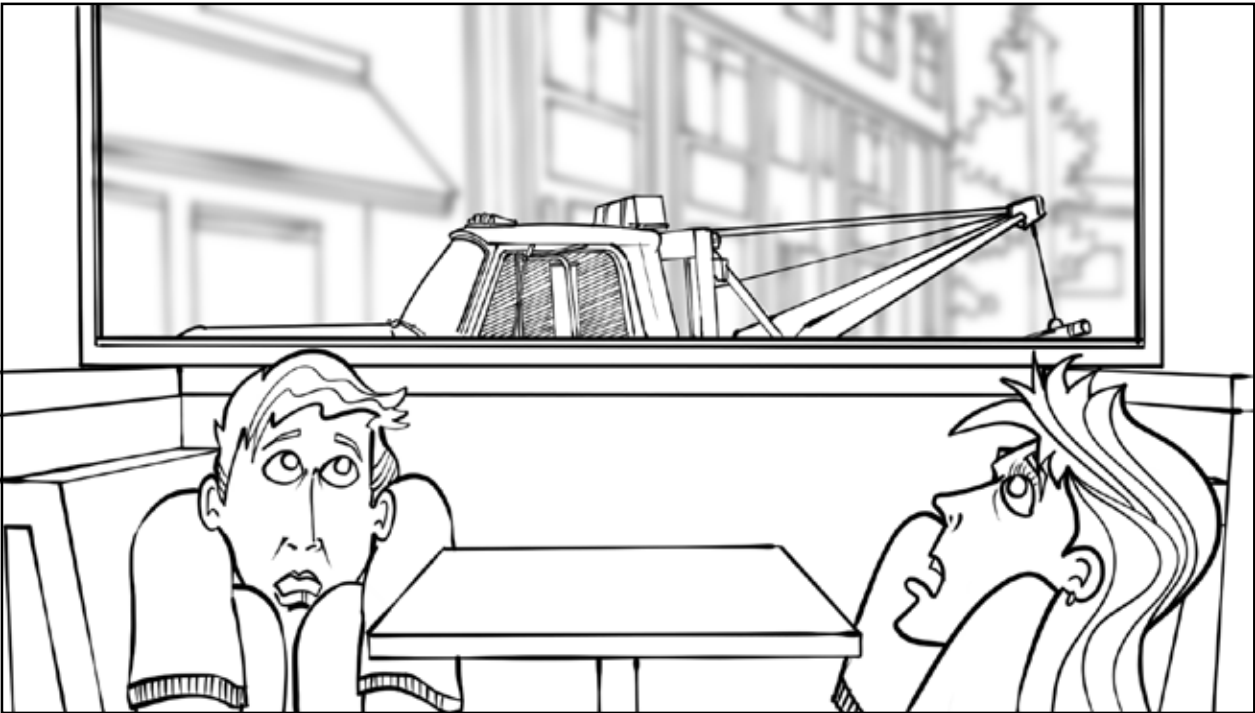

In the distance we see something threatening approaching: it's a mean looking tow truck the shot is similar to that of a group of banditos approaching a small town). One of the town folk sees it and warns the rest.

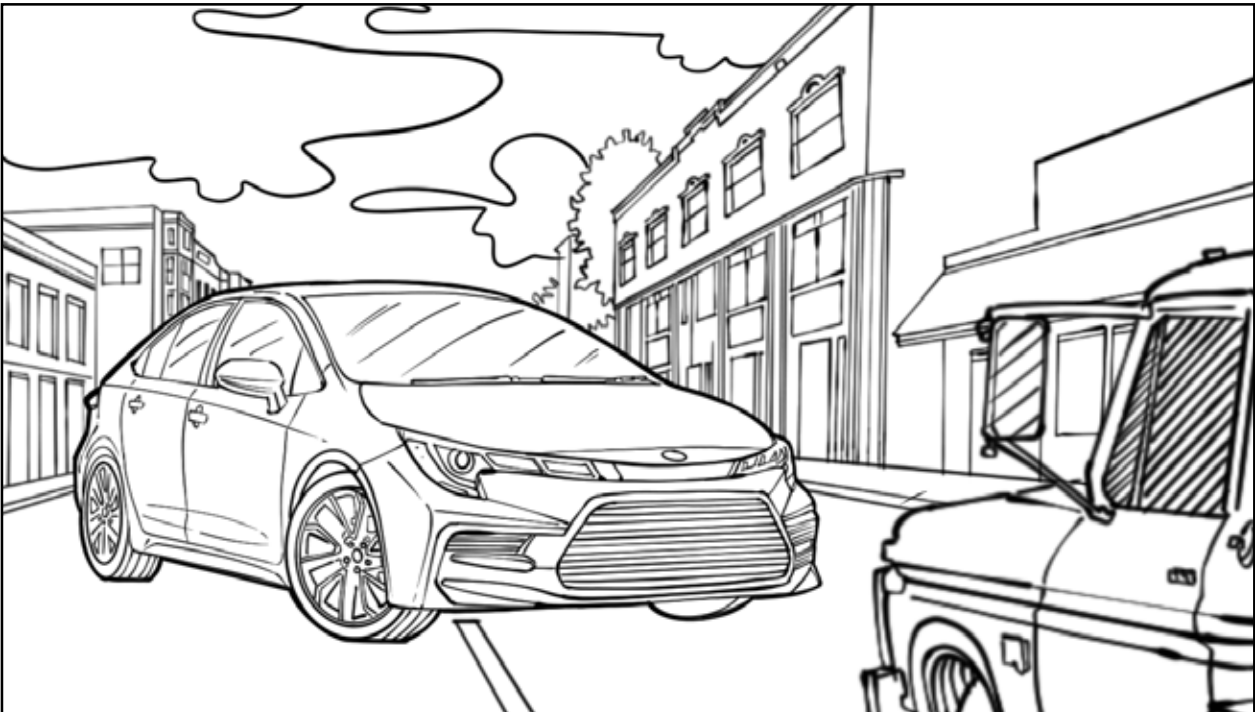

People run from the streets into the houses and buildings. Business owners change the sign from OPEN to CLOSED. Mothers hide their children... Everybody takes cover.

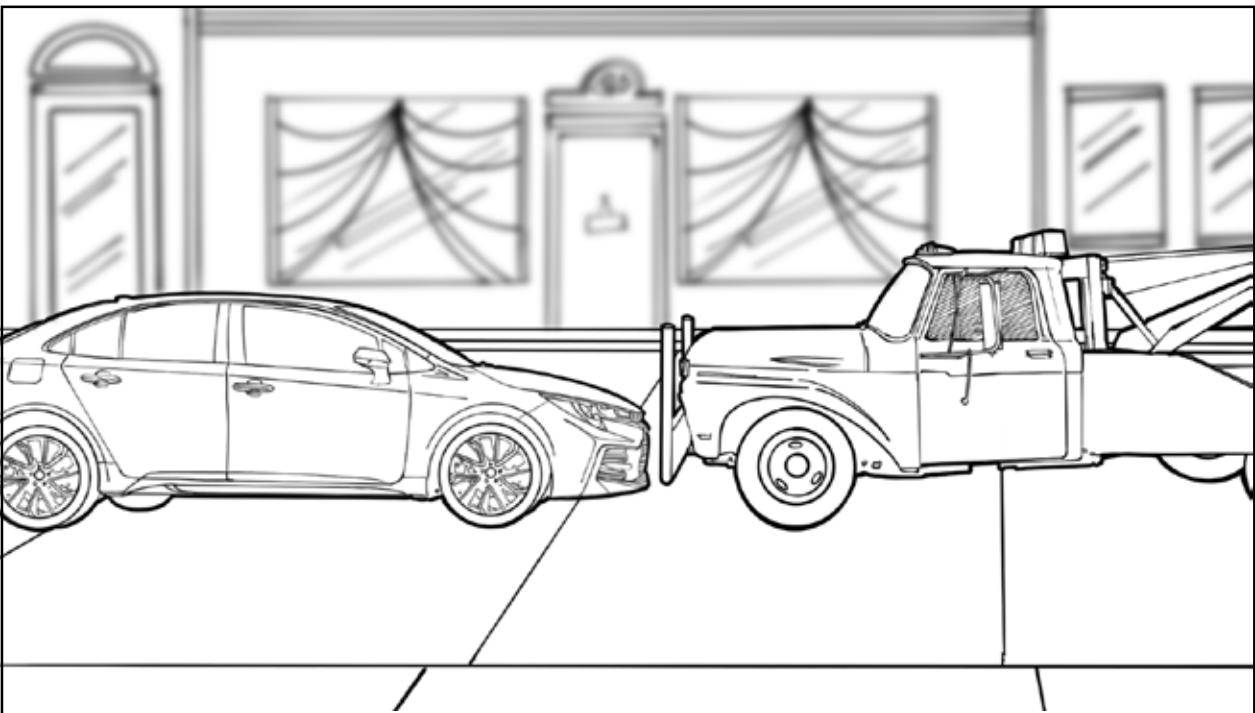

The tow truck drives down the now empty streets like a predator looking for prey.

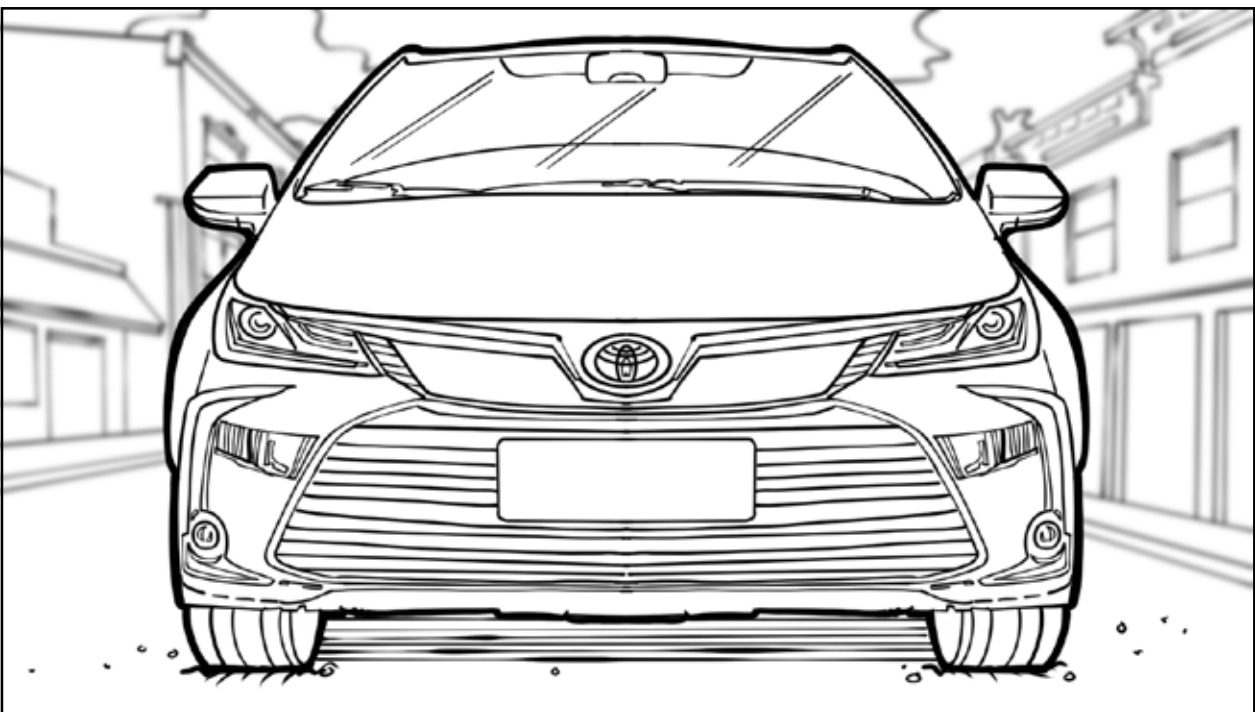

We have counter shots of people hiding inside the buildings, that also allow us to see the tow truck outside. A group slides down their chair so that the crane does not see him through he restaurant's glass. We see a boy behind a window that catches a glimpse of the tow truck and takes several pumps of his asthma medicine.

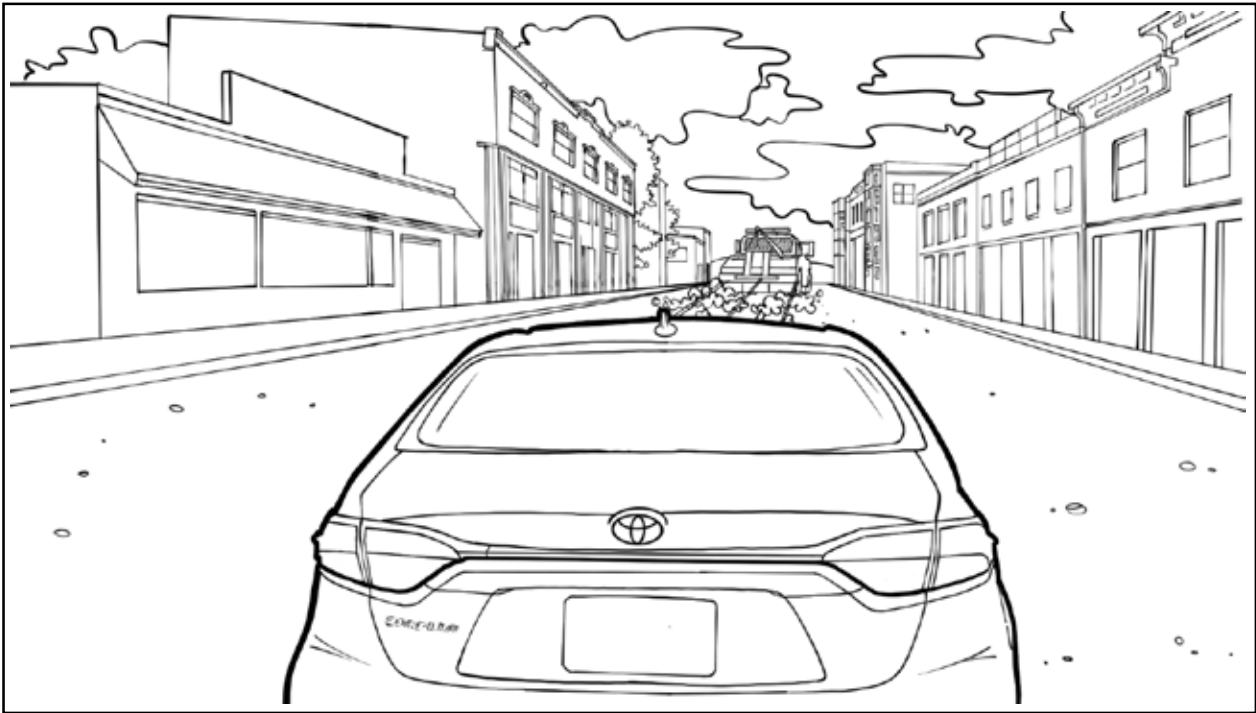

Then the tow truck comes face to face with another vehicle on the street, a Toyota. We have several shots of a brand new, beautifully pimped Corolla, to establish it as our hero.

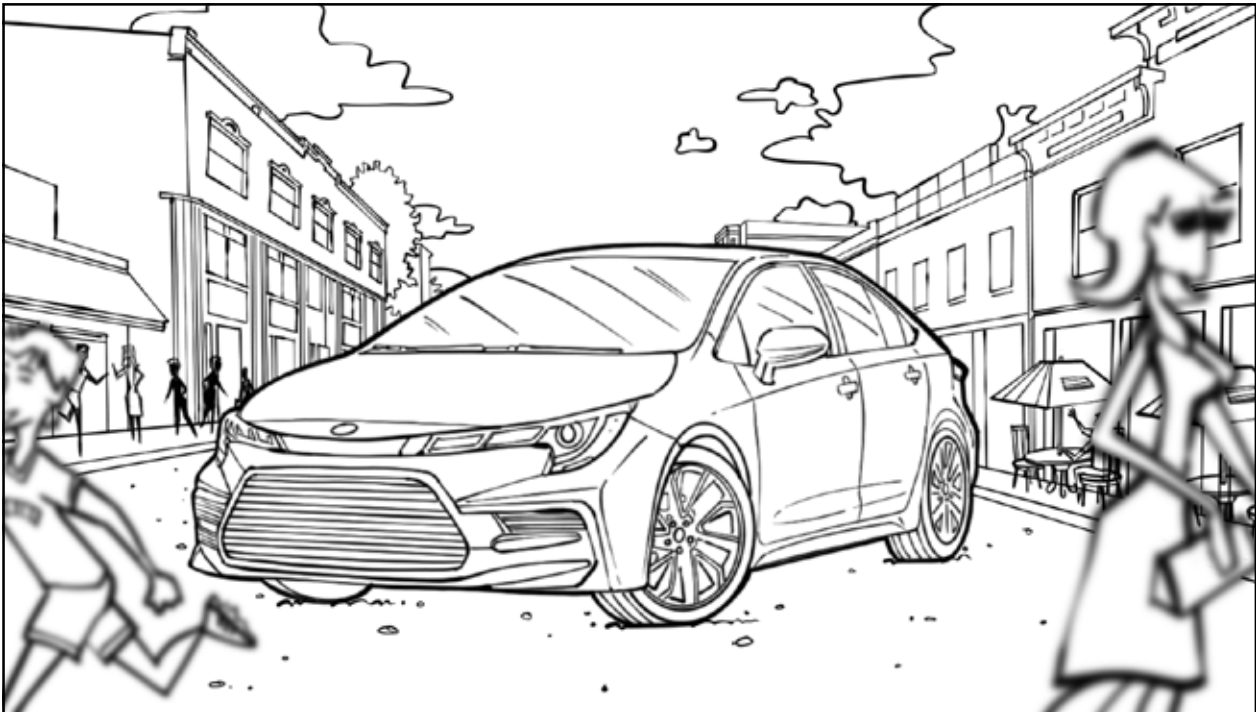

We cut to a shot of the truck and the car coming squaring off. There is a lot of tension in the air.

We then cut to a full frontal shot of the Corolla. It does a sudden unexpected move like gently honking its horn or blinks its lights.

The tow truck runs off in fear.

Corolla becomes the town hero as everything comes back to life.

We cut to closing: Maneja Confiado.
